11/15/2006 9:10	Anderson	William							In view of the danger posed to marine organisms by sonar, I urge you to reconsider the locations and planning process for mine and antisubmarine warfare sonar training exercises. The use of sonar has been shown to be extremely damaging and often life threatening to many marine organisms. Before testing, the Navy needs to put in place and make public a well thought-out and responsible plan that outlines and identifies ways to protect wildlife and endangered species in training areas. Until such a plan is in place, I respectfully request that the Navy delay any training exercises off the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States.
